Leading Criminal Justice Leaders Call On Kansas Officials To Fund Unit to Review Past Convictions and Correct Injustices

More Than 50 Current and Former Elected Prosecutors and Police Chiefs Rally Behind DA Mark Dupree's Efforts to Establish a Conviction Integrity Unit in Wyandotte County, Kansas

A group of 56 current and former elected prosecutors, state attorneys general, and law enforcement leaders banded together today to call on the Kansas City Board of Commissioners to take immediate action and release funding requested by District Attorney Mark Dupree for the creation of a Conviction Integrity Unit (CIU) in the Wyandotte County DA's Office. Already active in more than 30 jurisdictions, CIUs are a nationally recognized best practice for reviewing and addressing past convictions that raise concerns about the integrity of the justice system.

Calling out local law enforcement's "misguided" opposition to DA Dupree's proposal, current and former Police Chiefs and elected prosecutors from around the nation signed on to the letter explaining that "reviewing and correcting past injustices is squarely within the DA's role, and indeed his obligation." Signatories include 30 current elected DAs and State's Attorneys, many of whom have CIUs in their own offices, such as Eric Gonzalez (Brooklyn, NY), Kim Ogg (Houston, TX), Kim Foxx (Chicago, IL), Cy Vance (New York, NY) and Jeff Rosen (San Jose, CA), current and former state attorneys general including AG Karl Racine (District of Columbia) and Former AG Jim Petro (State of Ohio), and a dozen current and former police chiefs/commissioners and Sheriffs including Chief Chris Magnus (Tucson, AZ), Chief Sylvia Moir (Tempe, AZ), Chief Tim Lentz (Covington, Louisiana) and Commissioner Branville Bard (Cambridge, MA).

DA Dupree recently announced plans to establish a CIU to formalize a review process for credible claims of innocence or official misconduct in past cases—200 such claims have already been received by his office. The impetus for this unit was DA Dupree's months-long examination of a high-profile case that led to the exoneration of Lamonte McIntyre, a teenager who spent 23 years behind bars for a crime he did not commit. A CIU would speed up the processing of other cases raising similar concerns about past injustices. As the letter notes: “victims are safer—and we prevent further victimization—when communities trust that their law enforcement officials seek the truth rather than a ‘win.’”

Local law enforcement leaders in Kansas have rallied against Dupree’s efforts – opposition that has stalled funding for the unit. The Kansas City Board of Commissioners will decide as early as this week whether to release funds for the CIU, as requested by DA Dupree.

“Anyone who cares about fairness and public safety should support efforts to correct the mistakes made by our justice system,” said Miriam Krinsky, Executive Director of Fair and Just Prosecution, a national network of elected prosecutors committed to change and innovation that organized the letter. “A prosecutor’s core responsibility is the pursuit of justice and truth in every case. Allowing injustices to continue erodes public trust in the rule of law, which is the bedrock of our criminal justice system.”

“CIUs are an increasingly common way for prosecutors, who have an ethical obligation to remedy instances of injustice, to review not only claims of innocence, but also of law enforcement misconduct or due process violations,” said District Attorney Jeff Rosen, a signatory on the letter and one of the first DAs to establish a CIU. “Our CIU has been instrumental in identifying and guarding against miscarriages of justice and promoting enhanced accountability and transparency.”

According to the National Registry of Exonerations, there have been more than 2,240 exonerations since 1989, when the advent of DNA technology opened a new door for proving innocence.

“We should applaud prosecutors’ efforts to re-examine cases where the integrity of a conviction is at issue and recognize that everyone in our justice system bears the responsibility for a miscarriage of justice,” said Police Chief Chris Magnus. “That is why I have joined dozens of law enforcement leaders in voicing support for DA Dupree’s efforts to deliver a more fair justice system and promote a safer community.”
